AN ENCOURAGING YEAR

As you settle in to read the latest edition of the Foundation's annual report, I trust you will find its content engaging and encouraging.

Foundation Board Chair Jim Shook reflects on the growing emphasis on the word "education" in the Foundation's name. Jim and I have been involved with our organization for over 50 years, and we share pride in how our organization has evolved in a way that stays true to our mission.

Ryan London, our management board chair, highlights the learning from the summer staff survey conducted last season. As he asserts, our staff makes our programs a reality, and formally gathering their feedback helps guide our efforts.

There is an informative article about Ernest Oberholtzer, our longtime and closest neighbor on Rainy Lake. The influences he had on camp were profound and we continue to invest in our relationship with the Oberholtzer Foundation as they work tirelessly to preserve Ober's legacy.

The financial section delivers a strong report on the organization's monetary health, including our annual donor roll which has grown dramatically over the past three years.

And finally, we've added something new: sharing non-financial data that summarizes some of the unique aspects of our programs. I hope at least one fact makes you smile.

As we turn the page to the 2023 camp season, I want to extend my most heartfelt thank you to our entire camp family. The period we have just come through has been incredibly challenging and yet, while many other camps are struggling to stay afloat, we are thriving, in no small part, because of the support we receive from so many. As difficult as the last three years have been, they stand as evidence of the organization's resiliency and its importance to our community.

We all cherish our camp memories, but I would offer up that kids need the wilderness experiences of our programs now more than ever.

Enjoy the great outdoors wherever the trail may take you!

A MEANINGFUL EDUCATIONAL ENTITY

As I reflect on the current status of the Camping & Education Foundation, it becomes abundantly clear that it does much more than run two summer camps. While that is a common perception, it is exciting to recognize the significant shift that has occurred. We have expanded into a meaningful educational entity, with a much broader base, that instills in young people our core values of honesty, integrity, community, teamwork, appreciation of the wilderness and an understanding of the environment around us.

Our two summer camps provide a wilderness experience for over 500 young men and women each summer. Our programs at Owakonze, in its first year, reached another 30 young men and women. Our Urban Wilderness Program in Cincinnati provided over 1,700 students an opportunity to build canoes, practice teamwork, and learn wilderness skills to which they might otherwise never have been exposed.

Our mission is to offer wilderness experiences for young people, enabling them to emerge well rounded and equipped to meet the challenges of today's complex world. Our programs continue to present challenging situations that allow young people to find out what they are made of and to be proud of their accomplishments, while absorbing our core values.

The proof of our success is in the pudding, as they say. Enrollment in our camps is strong and validates the impact and value of our programs. The positive feedback we get from the families of our participants is further proof. Our Urban Wilderness Program is in high demand from educators. Annual giving is at an all-time high, and endowment gifts continue to grow. That is a strong report card!

We are fast approaching the 100th anniversary of the organization, a highly unusual event in our industry. We do so as one of the premier camping organizations in America, poised for continued growth and success. We should all be proud of the manner in which it has grown: honoring our mission to provide transformational wilderness experiences that foster teamwork, resilience, an appreciation of the outdoors, and lifelong community.

THE STRENGTH OF OUR STAFF

I was fortunate to spend significant amounts of time at both camps last summer and was reminded of the John Holden quote acknowledging how our programming's strengths firmly lie within our culture and the capacity of our people. I saw this firsthand at both our camps, during a visit to Owakonze, and at an amazing canoe build with the Urban Wilderness team in Chicago last fall. The future of our programs is bright, as long as we continue to recruit, develop, and retain the talented staff that make it all possible.

Last November, we undertook an organizational health survey with our 140+ full-time and summer staff. There was much to celebrate in the data. Over 97% of the respondents agreed that our organization's work positively impacts people's lives, and that team members work together effectively. Respondents also celebrated personal accountability, resiliency, and motivation to succeed. In the open comment portion of the survey, staff members shared that they pride our organization's ability to work hard and play hard at the same time, and that the group-driven tactical problem solving bonded them into lifelong relationships. They also proudly shared that our enriching and challenging wilderness experiences were balanced by a culture of gratefulness and service.

There was also important feedback related to improving our communication with staff about our strategy, direction, and changes. Respondents asked for more training, increased connection with other staff members during the busy part of the summer, more interaction with the boards, and acknowledgement that their voices and opinions are heard.

A recently published American Camp Association study validates our increased focus on staff. In short, positive camp experiences are linked to both youth and staff development. The ACA's work determined that camp staff are motivated to give back to a community that supports belonging, offers developmental opportunities and experiential learning, and makes a difference in the lives of youth.

Importantly, the study found that camp employment better develops social awareness, relationship skills and leadership skills than school or non-camp employment. When combined with meaningful work and work values, these summer experiences are powerful settings for our staff to develop career-related skills, which the study found translated into finding more meaningful post-camp work.

We have a lot to celebrate, and like always, our dedicated staff makes this possible. To secure our future, we will continue to improve how we recruit, develop and retain our staff. This means continuing to invest in training and development, collect feedback, and communicate how our organization continues to evolve.

A MAN CALLED OBER

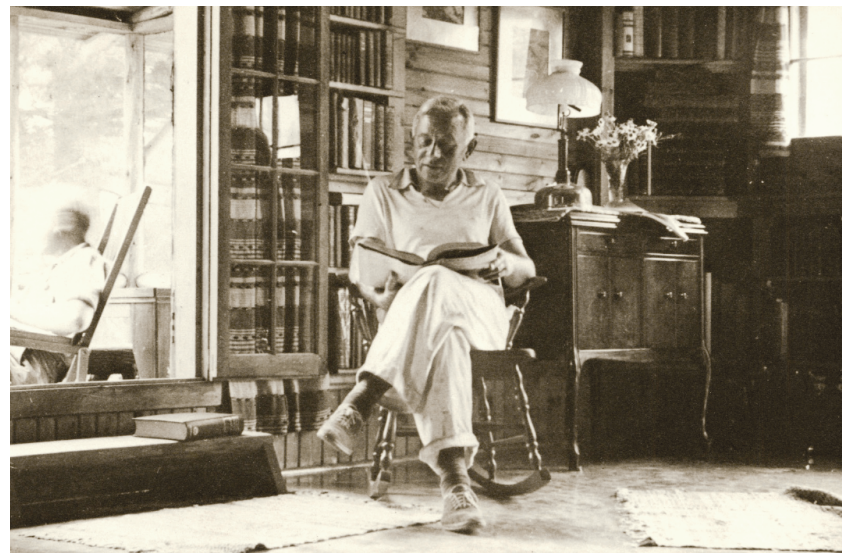

A VERY
LOCAL HERO,
AND ONE WHO CONTINUES TO INSPIRE

BY HUGH HALLER

One of the most fascinating threads that weaves throughout the Camping & Education Foundation's history is the relationship with explorer, author, conservationist and our longtime neighbor, Ernest Oberholtzer. Born in 1884 in Davenport, Iowa, Ober (as he was commonly known) was educated at Harvard and made his first trip to the Minnesota-Ontario border area in 1906. In 1913, Ober moved to Rainy Lake, purchased Mallard Island in 1922, and lived on the small island for 35 years.

After arriving on Rainy Lake, Ober devoted many years to living with, studying, and learning to speak with indigenous tribes in the region of whom he was a huge advocate. When Dr. Bernard Mason, Kooch-i-ching's third director, came to Deer Island in 1948, he instantly formed a strong partnership with Ober. Ober and Mason shared a deep interest and involvement in Ojibwa culture through dances, crafts, woodsmanship and Native lore. When campers were invited to look around Mallard Island, Ober shared with them his training as a student in landscape architecture and showed them how he had transformed the island, engaging carpenters, rock masons and nursery folks, much of which was inspired by the local Native culture.

Ober's influence on Camp Kooch-i-ching can be felt in multiple ways. He assisted Cecil "Pop" Vance, Kooch-i-ching's first director, in the initial purchase of part of Deer Island. In 1968, he worked with John Holden to secure the remainder of the island, which included a wilderness covenant that guaranteed that we would never develop the island beyond its 20-acre camp boundary. Our summer headquarters and the surrounding land, part of which became Ogichi Daa Kwe's mainland campus, was the summer respite of Ober as a young man.

Today, the Camping & Education Foundation shares a partnership with the Oberholtzer Foundation, working together on advancing Native American initiatives. Kooch-i-ching and Ogichi campers and staff often visit Mallard Island during the summer, helping with dock projects, visiting the teaching lodge, or just wandering around the magical island.

Ober was drawn to the Northwoods canoe country. The Oberholtzer-Magee exploration of Saskatchewan, Nunavut and Manitoba was likely the inspiration behind camp's "Big Trip" to Hudson Bay. In camp's earliest days, Pop Vance would often invite Ober to the lodge for a night of storytelling. Ober would captivate campers with the accounting of his famous 1912 canoe trip, a 2,000-mile, four-month expedition to Hudson Bay, exploring the unmapped territory of the Canadian Barrens.

In another twist of fate, longtime alum Jack Wadsworth uncovered photos of this wild adventure while staying on Mallard Island during Kooch-i-ching's 75th anniversary celebration. Realizing its historical significance, Wadsworth commissioned the commemorative book "Toward Magnetic North." The photographic essay documents the exploratory canoe route of Oberholtzer and his trusted Ojibwa friend and guide, Billy Magee, one of six Indian guides Ober hired to accompany him during his journey "toward magnetic north." The recounting of the journey holds a special significance for those who have shared a Kooch-i-ching or Ogichi wilderness experience.

Throughout his lifetime, Ober worked tirelessly to preserve the Quetico-Superior wilderness. He was president of the Quetico-Superior Council. To preserve the Rainy River Basin along the U.S.-Canadian Border, he fought hard to prevent the construction of a series of dams, thus protecting the watershed that we access every summer. Without Ober's work, it is unlikely that the rivers and lakes we have traveled for decades would have survived the march of industrial progress.

To say that camp will forever be indebted to this Northwoods hero is an understatement. Past and future generations will continue to benefit from Ober's commitment to the preservation of the north country that contributes to our shared experiences.

A PRIMER ON THE FOUNDATION'S FINANCES

BY HUGH HALLER

The Camping & Education Foundation has benefitted from tremendous support from its extended family and sound financial management. This has enabled the organization to completely eliminate its debt and weather the financial hardships stemming from the pandemic and the flood of 2022. What we do—summer camps, youth programs, wilderness trips, etc.—is complex, and our finances reflect that.

Outlined below are answers to some of questions I hear from staff, parents, board members, foundations, and donors.

What are the sources of revenue for the organization and why do we need to raise money each year?

- Tuition is the largest source of revenue, but it normally accounts for about 65% of the costs of running our programs. This amount fluctuates each year based on each camp's enrollment. The "gap," as it is often referred to, is the remaining 35%. This is funded through annual donations that contribute approximately 25% and investment income from our endowments provide the remaining 10%.
- The Urban Wilderness program is almost exclusively funded by foundation grants. Some schools defray the cost of materials, but it is important that the ability to pay doesn't exclude a school from participating.

Do we spend all the money we raise?

- All of the money we raise through our annual fund, plus more from endowment income, goes to support the operating budgets of the two camps that their tuition doesn't cover. This includes administrative costs, program costs, staff salaries, and behind the scenes expenses like fundraising costs, legal, taxes and insurance.
- Some gifts, such as a gift that is specially earmarked for a building project, can be spent in future years. Finally, outside grants that support our Urban Wilderness Program are typically spent in the same year.

What is the difference between the endowment and the annual fund?

- An endowment is similar to a savings account where the savings are invested and produce a return. The organization can only spend a certain percentage (no more than 5%) based on the average value during the previous three years. If we were to spend more than that, we would start depleting the endowment's base amount, commonly known as its principal.
- The annual fund comes from donations received throughout the year to support the organization's overall operating budget. They are called annual funds because they need to be raised each year.

Does the money we raise come mostly from our alumni or from outside entities?

- The money that we raise comes largely from within our community of alumni, parent and family foundation support. Additionally, we receive substantial outside grants to support programs like the Urban Wilderness Program.

Some gifts and funds are restricted. What does that mean?

- A restricted gift is when the donors specify how they want their donation to be used. Some donors want to support scholarships, some prefer physical assets, and others want to support a specific program. These donations go into a restricted fund, meaning the money can only support that specific purpose.

Do we spend a lot of money in our fundraising efforts?

- We do not spend much on fundraising, typically just over 4%. We are fortunate to have donors who understand our personal approach and the value of our programs. A large part of our fundraising expense is travel, which involves both asking for donations, but more importantly, making sure our donors support how we use the money they generously give to our organization.

How does the budgeting process work and is the process the same for each entity?

- Each program sets its own operating budget and submits it to the management board for approval. The budgets are constantly balancing short term (like food and staff for the current year), medium (like maintenance and upgrading equipment) and long term needs (like buildings).

It appears that the Foundation has a lot of money, yet sometimes budget constraints impact what can be done. What difference does a few hundred or a thousand dollars make if the endowment is in the millions?

- The camps can only spend the money that is approved in their operating budgets each year. As mentioned above, the camps' budgets have a shortfall after tuition and fees. This gap is filled by the annual fund and investment income from the endowment. Spending more than the budget allows would undermine the ability of the endowment to provide future funding.

Who oversees the investing of the endowment funds?

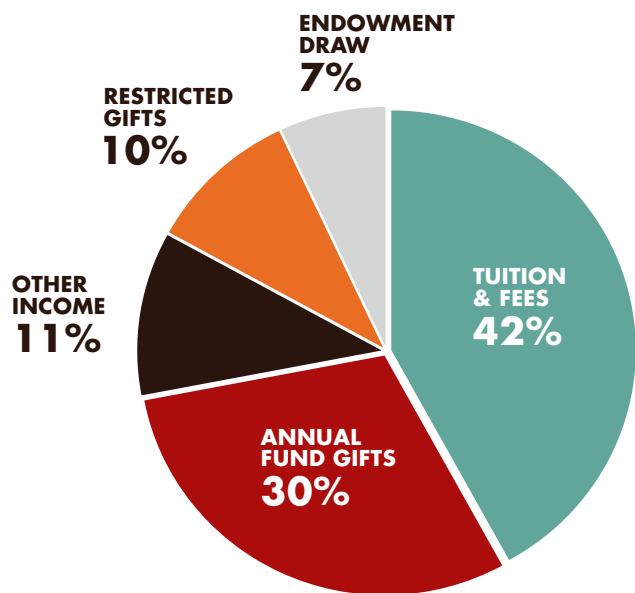

- There are three levels of oversight. Fiduciary oversight resides with the Camping & Education Foundation board of trustees. An independent investment committee, made up of the board officers and individuals working in the financial services industry, oversees the organization's investment policy. This investment committee makes recommendations to the CEF board which has final say on all investment decisions. Our investment manager, One Capital Management, provides advice and manages our investments.

What does the size of the endowment need to be for the organization to achieve financial independence?

- Our upcoming anniversary campaign presents a unique opportunity to put the organization on a path toward financial independence. Our endowment would need to be two to three times the size it is today to replace our current annual fund. That said, we will always have an annual fund, just not as large, or as dependent on it as we are now.
